My favorite vista on Aquidneck Island is Sachuest Point National Wildlife Refuge in Middletown. It is one of the important places for me to see wildlife on the island. I have been there twice, but I found something new there for the second time. What I like the most at the place are the waves, rock outcrops and the trails that you can walk. The waves of the sea by the refuge amazed me when I first saw them. The brilliant blue waves and white splashes with the strong winds were indicating that they were bringing the majesty of the Atlantic Ocean to the island that day. The islands of the rock outcrops in the ocean of rocks and leaves are also picturesque. Colorful and countless rocks lie around them at the shoreline. Lastly, there are some trails that you can walk to see the beautiful Atlantic Ocean, wildlife, and interesting rock outcrops. Once you start from the parking lot, go around the trail, and come back there, you can feel like you could contact the real nature of Aquidneck Island and deepen your love towards it. I myself love the place and want it to show me nature forever.
